

Contributors

BRITA LOTSBERG BRYN · is Postdoctoral Fellow of the Landslide project at the University of Bergen. Her doctoral thesis on Pasternak's My Sister—Life (1997) is forthcoming in English as The Ray of Energy and its Refractions: A Reading of Pasternak's 'My Sister—Life'. Bryn has published translations of Russian poetry into Norwegian and of Norwegian poetry into Russian. Her current research project focuses on problems of irony and authenticity in contemporary Russian prose.

MICHAEL S. GORHAM · is Associate Professor of Russian Studies at the University of Florida. Gorham has published a number of articles on the intersection of language, literature, and politics in Russia in the 1920s and 1930s. His book on this topic, Speaking in Soviet Tongues: Language Culture and the Politics of Voice in Revolutionary Russia (2003), was selected as an “Outstanding Academic Book” by Choice Magazine and won the 2004 award for “Best Book in Literary and Cultural Studies” from the American Association of Teachers of Slavic and East European Languages (AATSEEL). His current research explores related issues of language, politics, and national identity in late and post-Soviet Russia, most recently reflected in his article “Putin’s Language” (Ab Imperio 4, 2005).

KNUT ANDREAS GRIMSTAD · is Associate Professor and Head of Polish Studies in the Department of Literature and European Languages, University of Oslo. He has published on early Russian hagiography, Polish Baroque literature, Russian 17th- and 19th-century prose, Russian and Polish Modernism, as well as contemporary Polish poetry. He is the author of Styling Russia: Multiculture in the Prose of Nikolai Leskov (forthcoming) and co-editor (with Ingunn Lunde) of Celebrating Creativity:

Essays in Honour of Jostein Børtnes (1997) and (with Ursula Phillips) of Gender and Sexuality in Ethical Context: Ten Essays on Polish Prose (2005). He is a founding member of the Programme on East European Cultures and Societies (PEECS) at the University of Trondheim (NTNU).

INGUNN LUNDE · is Professor of Russian and project manager of the Landslide project at the University of Bergen. She has published articles on medieval Slavic literature and culture, rhetorical theory, and 19th- and 20th-century Russian literature. She is the author of Verbal Celebrations: Kirill of Turov's Homiletic Rhetoric and its Byzantine Sources (2001), and editor or co-editor of seven books, among them Dialogue and Rhetoric: Communication Strategies in Russian Text and Theory (1999) and (with Peter Alberg Jensen) Severnyi sbornik: Proceedings of the NorFA Network in Russian Literature 1995–2000 (2000). Lunde is the founder and general editor of Slavica Bergensia (1999–).

ELENA MARKASOVA · is Reader at the Department of Further Education in Philology at St Petersburg State University. The subject of her doctoral thesis was the theory of figures of speech in Russian rhetorical handbooks of the 17th and 18th centuries. Her scholarly interests include the history of rhetoric and of linguistics, the history of education in Russia (17th–20th centuries), and the history of the press and journalism in the Soviet Union 1920–1930. She is the author of Predstavleniia o figurakh rechi v russkikh ritorikakh XVII–nachala XVIII veka (2002), and of articles on the history of rhetoric in Russia.

ANNIKA B. MYHR · studied Russian and Comparative Literature in Oslo, Bergen, St Petersburg and Irkutsk and completed her MA dissertation (as a Student Fellow of the Landslide project) on three contemporary poets from St Petersburg, focusing on their views of language as expressed in their creative work (Diktningens perspektiver på språk og språkutvikling i dikt av Elena Sjavarts, Sergej Zavjalov, David Raskin og Svetlana Bodrunova, 2005). She has also translated Russian poetry into Norwegian, and published her own poems in various Scandinavian journals and anthologies.

MARTIN PAULSEN · is a doctoral student of the Landslide project at the University of Bergen. He completed his MA dissertation on the modern development of the three East Slavonic standard languages (Istoriia grammatik: Razvitie vostochnoslavianskikh standartnykh iazykov skvoz' prizmu grammaticheskogo opisaniia prichastii, 2004). His doctoral work focuses on the concept of standard language as a model for understanding languages as we know them today and their contemporary development. Paulsen is co-editor (with Bernhard L. Mohr) of Den nye vodkaen: Seks artikler om russisk, ukrainsk og hviterussisk samtidslitteratur (2005), editor of Russisk samtidslitteratur (Nordahl & eff. vol. 1–2, 2006), and has published articles on Russian and Belarusian contemporary literature.

TINE ROESEN · is Postdoctoral Fellow of the Landslide project at the University of Bergen. She completed her doctoral thesis on Dostoevsky's early works (Casualties of Art: Narrators, Stories, and Kinds of Addressivity in Dostoevsky's Early Works (1846–1849), University of Copenhagen, 2001). Her publications include articles on Dostoevsky, Tat'iana Tolstaia and socialist realism, as well as Danish translations from Russian and German. Her current research addresses two trends in contemporary Russian literature: unpretentious texts and the theme of the Cyrillic alphabet as bearer of Russian identity.

LARA RYAZANOVA-CLARKE · is Senior Lecturer in Russian at the University of Edinburgh and Fellow of The Chartered Institute of Linguists. She is co-author (with Terence Wade) of The Russian Language Today (1999) and has published widely within her main fields of research, which include Russian language and culture, ideology and identity, cognitive approaches to Russian and Russian metaphoric studies, recent developments in Russian language and linguistic policy, stylistics, lexicography and lexicology.

IRINA SANDOMIRSKAJA · is Professor of Cultural Studies at the Baltic and East European Graduate School of the University College of South Stockholm. Sandomirskaja is the author of Semantika emotivnykh glagolov so znacheniem povedeniia (1991), Kniga o Rodine: Opyt analiza diskursivnykh praktik (2001) and of articles on cultural studies and theoretical linguistics. Current projects include De patientia: Language,

Violence, and Strategies of Subjectivity (a collection of essays on language, power and writing) and A Story of O, or, Between Technique and Catastrophe (on Soviet deaf-blind education and related theories of language and consciousness).

DIRK UFFELMANN · is Lecturer in Russian at the University of Edinburgh. He has published widely on the theory of literature and the interconnection between literature and religion, philosophy, architecture and economics. He is especially interested in problems of cross-cultural relations and migration. Uffelmann is the author of Die russische Kulturoso- phie: Logik und Axiologie der Argumentation (1999) and Der erniedrigte Christus und seine Ausgestaltungen in der russischen Kultur und Literatur (2005). He is also the editor or co-editor of several books, including (with Mikhail Ryklin & Klaus Städtke) Uskol'zaiushchii kontekst: Russkaia filosofia v XX veke (2002).

LIUDMILA ZUBOVA · is Professor of Russian linguistics at St Petersburg State University. Her research interests combine modern Russian linguistics, the language of poetry, and the history of Russian, and she has published widely within these fields, including two monographs on the language of Marina Tsvetaeva (Poeziia Mariny Tsvetaevoi: Lingvisticheskii aspekt, 1989; Iazyk poezii Mariny Tsvetaevoi: Fonetika, slovoobrazovanie, frazeologiya, 1999) and a book on contemporary Russian poetry in the context of the history of language: Sovremennaia russkaia poeziia v kontekste istorii iazyka (2000). Zubova is a member of the editorial board of Slovar' russkikh govorov Karelii i sopredel'nykh oblastei (1994–).